What this survey is about

People across Wales have different levels of health.

People often experience health issues because of where they live and how much money they have. For example, if they are from a poorer area of Wales.

We want to make sure people are treated fairly when it comes to health and that they have good chances to be healthy.

We are bringing a new law to Wales called the Health Impact Assessment (Wales) Regulations.

We want to know what people think about public bodies carrying out health impact assessments (HIAs) in Wales.

Public bodies are organisations that run services for the public. For example, health services, local councils, fire services.

A health impact assessment means thinking about how something could affect people's health.

More about health in Wales

We want to make sure people in Wales are treated fairly when it comes to their health.

It means giving people good health care and the support they need to live a healthy life.

There are a number of things that can affect our health. For example:

- How healthy our food is
- How much education we have
- How much money we have

People who live in the poorest areas of Wales are much more likely to experience health issues than those who do not.

Also, people from these areas are more likely to die at a younger age.

This is not fair. As many of these health issues can be avoided.

We also know that treating these health issues costs a lot of money to the NHS.

At the moment, health impact assessments are only carried out in some situations.

The law called the Well-being of Future Generations (Wales) Act says public bodies must carry out sustainable development.

Sustainable development means thinking about how long something will last. Making sure our actions and decisions help people now and in future.

It also means thinking about well-being for the people of Wales now and in the future.

Public bodies have to tell people what their well-being goals are.

Well-being means a person is happy, healthy, and is comfortable with their life and what they do.

The well-being goals come from the Well-being of Future Generations Act. The well-being goals are a list of things that will help make Wales a better place to live in the future.

More about the law

There are new draft regulations which will be part of a law that came out in 2017 called the Public Health (Wales) Act.

Regulations are rules to make sure things happen in the best way possible.

Part of the Public Health (Wales) Act is about health impact assessments.

Health impact assessments are a way of thinking about the effects something will have on physical health and mental health.

Not just now, but in the future.

The draft regulations talk about what a public body needs to do and how to go about doing a health impact assessment.

They explain what public bodies need to think about and how to stop any bad effects on health.

Public bodies will need to understand people and think about things like:

- Where someone lives.

- How much money they have.

- If people have protected characteristics.

Protected characteristics are areas of life where people are often treated unfairly. For example, because of disability, age, gender, race.

As these kinds of things all affect the health chances someone has.

A public body must also publish the results of its health impact assessment.

Question 1

Do you think it is important for public bodies to have to think about the bigger issues that can affect health?

For example, living in a poor community. Please write your answer here:

In the Public Health Wales Act it lists all the organisations that are called a public body.

This is the same list of public bodies which fall under another law called the Wellbeing of Future Generations (Wales) Act.

We are thinking of also including organisations like Transport for Wales, Social Care Wales and others in this list.

Question 2

Should the longer list of public bodies be asked to carry out health impact assessments as well? Please write your answer here.

When would the new regulations apply?

Public bodies will have to carry out health impact assessments when they are making big decisions.

For example:

- with their long-term goals and plans
- changes to the development of public services
- big plans about money.

They will not need to do a health impact assessment for day-to-day plans or smaller decisions.

Question 3

Do you agree that public bodies should carry out health impact assessments when making big decisions. Like those above? Please write your answer here.

Question 4

Are there any other situations where you think they should carry them out? Please write your answer here.

Question 5

Do you think there are any other situations where they should not have to carry them out? Please write your answer here.

How health impact assessments should be carried out

We think it is a good idea to allow public bodies to decide how to carry them out. For example, as part of other assessments.

But, we think there should be some rules in place to follow. Some of them are to:

- Get the views of people who provide the services.

- Get the views of anyone who could be affected.

- Keep record of the health impact assessment.

- Include all important information.

- Talk about the effects on both physical and mental health.

The public body will need to think about how they make sure health is improved. And health problems are reduced.

This includes thinking about the bigger issues that can affect health. Like where someone lives and if they have protected characteristics.

Question 6

Do you agree with us saying public bodies need to follow these minimum rules when doing a health impact assessment? Please write your answer here.

Question 7

Do you think there may be any negative effects of bringing out these regulations? Please write your answer here.

The role of Public Health Wales

Public Health Wales has a department called the Wales Health Impact Assessment Support Unit. They support the making of health impact assessments.

This department has run for 20 years and is thought of well around the world.

Public bodies do not have to follow what they say, but it could help them to carry out the assessments in the best ways.

Question 9

How much do you think guidelines could support public bodies? Please write your answer here.

Question 10

If you think guidelines are needed, what should be included? Please write your answer here.

Publishing health impact assessments

Public Bodies will need to publish their health impact assessments. For example, on their website.

They might publish them as part of other impact assessments or on their own.

Question 11

Do you think giving public bodies some options on how they can publish will be helpful to them? Please write your answer here.

Question 12

Do you have any ideas for how, when, and where they should be published? Please write your ideas here.

Using health impact assessments

Using health impact assessments will help public bodies think about the effects their work has on the people of Wales.

They can be used in an ongoing way. They can be checked and reviewed.

They work best when they involve other people and organisations. This is because different views are important.

Question 13

Is there any other support or information public bodies will need to help them carry out health impact assessments? Please write your answer here.

Question 14

Do you think our plans would affect the Welsh language at all?

Yes

No

How can we make sure the Welsh language would be treated fairly to the English language?
Please write your ideas here.

Question 15

Do you think these plans could give any chances to improve the use of the Welsh language? Please tell us what you think.

Question 16

Is there anything else you would like to add that has not been covered already? Please write your answer here.
